

The matcha whisk, or the Chasen, is a small piece of architecture, delicately carved from a piece of bamboo, yet multiplied into dozens of slender tines that bloom outward.

Each hosaki curves with quiet intention, carrying the memory of the craft in its grain. At its base, the jiku stands like a column, grounded, while the musubime and kagarito cinch and tie into an order of thread woven through.